MAIL CALL <h3>Life on the Red Planet?</h3> Readers were divided on the value of the search for life on Mars, subject of our Dec. 6 report. WE READ YOUR ARTICLE "THE SEARCH for Life" with great interest, but felt upset that billions of dollars are being spent in the search for life on Mars. This money should be redirected for research in ecofriendly energy sources. MEL and JOHN HAGERTY ALDBOURNE, ENGLAND	CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS HAD A HARD time raising funds from the King of Spain, too. But who, today, would argue that his effort was not worthwhile? So what is all this equivocation about getting a man on Mars? Quibbles about microeconomics and management efficiencies should pale before the sheer scientific and human challenge that this project begs. DAVID GREEN LIMASSOL, CYPRUS SHOULDN'T WE DETERMINE THAT THERE is intelligent life down here before we blow another billion dollars or so trying to find it on Mars? ROBERT DEL VALLE ROYAL OAK, MICHIGAN
