Auto makers grapple with longer-lasting cars

Some people buy cars because they fall in love with the style. Others buy vehicles for the same reason they buy a dishwasher: they need a machine to do the job. There's good news for the latter group: cars are lasting longer. Because of that, car makers have to create cars that don't break down and 1 develop models so compelling that customers will buy them even though their existing rides may have four or five years left.
