Selective preschools

Can someone please tell Anika Jackson — and other parents who complain about competitive private preschool admissions — that the problem is the self-absorbed, yuppie parents, not the schools. The types of schools "Rejected by Ivy League kindergarten" (Oct. 9) discusses are simply feeding a demand from those who will happily shell out $20,000 or more so their little geniuses can get every perceived advantage. When Jackson writes that "preschool shouldn't determine a child's success in life," the irony is inescapable. Preschool, of course, does not determine success in life, yet by participating in such a myth, Jackson — and other parents — actually fuel the problem they are complaining about.

- 1p 41 What is the main point of this letter?
- A A child's success in life is determined by its parents, not by preschool education.
  - B Anika Jackson is only negative about selection procedures because her own child was rejected.
  - C Applying for admission of your child to a private preschool contributes to the illusion that attending one matters.
  - D Ivy League Kindergarten selects pupils on the basis of parental annual income.
  - E Parents who have attended private preschool themselves tend to overestimate its importance.
